Anyone can exhibit in the Jancsó Art Gallery – that's part of the concept. Art from all kinds of artists, times and styles can be found here. Gallery manager Mr Jancsó told us what makes his gallery an exciting gathering place for art enthusiasts.

1. ....

The gallery in the basement of a residential building does not live up to the expectations one has about a typical art showroom. Instead of a few stills and landscapes on otherwise empty, white walls, dozens of diverse pictures hang side-by-side here, covering pretty much all available space.

2. ....

The gallery differs from conventional showrooms in the way that it is also used by some artists as a studio. Now a young woman stands in the gallery working on an oil painting with an apron around her, a spatula in the hand. Cool bar music fizzles out of a few old speakers, creating a laid-back, relaxed atmosphere.

3. ....

The gallery owner allows all the artworks to be exhibited that have something special for him. Under "special" he understands that the image should radiate a certain liveliness, regardless of it depicting humans, animals or objects. Even art amateurs usually find something peculiar about the gallery. "Somehow different, but different in a good way" is the verdict of many visitors.

4. ....

The gallery is based on the idea of offering an exhibition platform for as many artists as possible. When Jancsó contracts an artist, he lets them rent a certain square footage for a certain price. The artists then can fill this space as they like and set the selling prices for their works. However, after the sale, the gallery owner will receive 25 percent as commission.

5. ....

Jancsó himself became an artist about 18 years ago, working various jobs before that. His family taught him to learn a decent job, so he repressed his love of painting for years. It was a particularly dark period of his life that led him back to his passion. The only thing that helped him process his grief was painting.

6. ...

For Jancsó, art is more than just a career: it is love, sadness, joy. Simply put, pure emotion. He likes to stay in the gallery even when it's closed, to paint with music and a glass of wine. He does not need natural light. He just has to feel good at the moment.
