

HEALTHY LIFESTYLE, FOOD AND HEALTH

Health and healthy eating are closely connected because our lifestyle influences both our physical and mental condition. Nowadays many people live stressful lives, so it is becoming more important to pay attention to exercise, healthy food and regular rest. In my opinion, health is one of the most valuable things in life because without it people cannot work effectively or enjoy their free time properly.

When people meet each other at school, at work or even in the street, they often ask questions like “How are you?” or “Are you feeling better now?”. These simple conversations can show care and attention. Nowadays health problems, stress and tiredness are very common topics because many people feel exhausted after long working days.

In my experience, stress has a strong effect on both health and eating habits. Last year I was working in a stressful period and I often felt tired and nervous. Sometimes I had difficulty sleeping because I was thinking too much about work and responsibilities. During that time I realized that a healthy lifestyle is not only about sport, but also about mental health and balance.

If somebody has health problems, they usually visit a doctor or a specialist. At a doctor’s office patients are asked about their symptoms, lifestyle and eating habits. Sometimes people become nervous while they are waiting in the waiting room, especially before examinations. Fortunately, I have mostly had positive experiences with doctors. Once I had my blood pressure checked because I had been feeling dizzy for several days. After the examination I was advised to rest more, drink enough water and avoid too much stress.

Healthy eating also plays a very important role in preventing illnesses. Nowadays many people visit dietitians because they want to improve their lifestyle or lose weight. Dietitians usually recommend eating more vegetables, fruit and protein while reducing sugar and processed food. If people followed healthier diets, they would probably feel more energetic and active.

Food is not only necessary for survival; it is also an important part of culture and social life. People often meet friends or family members in restaurants, cafés or buffets. In cafés people usually drink coffee, relax and have conversations after work or school. Personally, I enjoy these places because the atmosphere is calm and comfortable.

Hungarian cuisine is quite famous among tourists. Traditional dishes such as goulash soup, stuffed cabbage and chicken paprikash are often recommended to foreign visitors. These meals are usually prepared with paprika, onion and sour cream. If foreign guests came to Hungary, I would definitely take them to a traditional Hungarian restaurant because food is one of the best ways to introduce our culture.

I personally enjoy both Hungarian and international food, but nowadays I try to eat more healthily than before. A few years ago I used to eat more fast food, but now I pay more attention to healthy eating habits. During weekdays I usually prefer lighter meals, while at weekends I sometimes eat pizza or desserts with my family.

Cooking at home can also be enjoyable and useful. Recipes are often shared online, so many people learn cooking from videos or social media. Sometimes I cook simple meals at home, especially pasta dishes or salads. Last month I had my kitchen repaired, so cooking was more difficult for a while. However, now everything has been finished and I enjoy spending time in the kitchen again.

Exercise is another important part of a healthy lifestyle. Some people go to the gym regularly, while others prefer walking, running or cycling. Personally, I try to walk as much as possible because it helps me reduce stress and clear my mind. In the future I would like to train with a personal trainer because professional advice can be very motivating. Exercises are often personalized in order to avoid injuries and improve results more effectively.

Nowadays many people have their health checked regularly because prevention is becoming more popular. I think this is a very positive change. If I had more free time, I would definitely spend more time exercising and preparing healthy meals. In my opinion, people should try to find balance in life because health depends on both physical and mental wellbeing. Healthy habits, regular exercise and balanced eating can improve not only our body, but also our quality of life.

HUMAN RELATIONSHIPS, SOCIETY AND COMMUNICATION

Human relationships are extremely important because people need support, communication and social connections in everyday life. Family, friends and communities all have a strong influence on our personality and happiness. In my opinion, good relationships make life easier, especially during difficult periods.

Family is usually the first and most important social group in a person's life. Every family has different habits, traditions and responsibilities. In many households family members share household tasks such as cooking, cleaning or shopping. In my family we usually try to help each other because cooperation makes everyday life less stressful. Sometimes responsibilities are divided naturally, while in other families schedules are carefully organized.

Family celebrations are also very important. Birthdays, Christmas and Easter are usually celebrated together in Hungary. During these occasions relatives meet, prepare meals and spend quality time together. Traditional food is often prepared for these events, and gifts are exchanged as well. Personally, I enjoy family gatherings because they create a warm atmosphere, although organizing them can sometimes be stressful.

Nowadays people often have less free time because they work a lot, so maintaining relationships requires effort. Friends usually stay in contact through social media, phone calls or messaging applications. I think online communication is useful because people can easily keep in touch even if they live far away from each other. However, face-to-face conversations are still more personal and meaningful.

I personally try to spend time with my friends whenever I can. Sometimes we go to cafés or restaurants, while other times we simply meet at somebody's home. House parties are especially popular among younger people because they are more relaxed and cheaper than clubs or bars. Last year I attended a small birthday party where we talked, listened to music and played games until late at night. I had been feeling stressed before that evening, but the event helped me relax.

Conflicts can appear in every relationship, especially in families or when people live together. If people do not communicate honestly, misunderstandings may develop easily. For example, exchange students who live abroad sometimes experience cultural differences or family conflicts. If I lived with a foreign host family, I would try to respect their rules and habits in order to avoid problems. In a new environment it is important to clarify politeness rules and acceptable behaviour as quickly as possible.

Society and communication have changed a lot because of technology and the media. Nowadays news spreads very quickly through television, newspapers, websites and social media platforms. Different types of media have both advantages and disadvantages. Television can provide visual information quickly, while newspapers usually offer more detailed explanations. Social media is fast and convenient, but unfortunately false information is often shared online.

In my opinion, people should check information from several sources before believing everything they read. Recently many world problems, such as climate change, wars and economic difficulties, have been discussed frequently in the media. These topics are often debated among friends, colleagues and even foreign acquaintances. If governments invested more money in education and environmental protection, some global problems could probably be reduced.

Charity events also play an important role in society. Many people participate in fundraising programs, food donations or volunteer work in order to help others. A few years ago I took part in a small charity event where clothes and food were collected for families in need. It was a positive experience because helping other people can create stronger communities.

Unfortunately, crime also exists in every society. If somebody becomes the victim of theft or another crime, they usually have to contact the police and report the situation officially. These conversations can be stressful, especially in a foreign country where language barriers may cause misunderstandings. That is why clear communication is very important in official situations.

Overall, I think strong human relationships and responsible communication are essential in modern society. Family, friends and communities can provide emotional support, while honest communication helps people solve problems more effectively. Although technology has changed social life significantly, personal relationships and mutual respect are still the foundations of a healthy society.

ENVIRONMENT, WEATHER AND PLACE OF LIVING

The environment around us has a strong influence on our everyday life. Weather, housing conditions, animals and environmental protection all affect how people live and feel. Nowadays these topics are becoming increasingly important because climate change and pollution are causing serious problems worldwide.

Weather is one of the most common topics in everyday conversations. People often talk about temperature, rain, sunshine or strong winds when they meet each other. In Hungary the weather changes a lot during the year because we have four distinct seasons. Summers are usually hot and dry, while winters can be cold and snowy. Spring and autumn are often unpredictable because the temperature may change quickly even within one day.

When foreign tourists visit Hungary, they are sometimes surprised by the hot summers. During July and August temperatures can rise above 35 degrees Celsius, so light clothes, sunglasses and enough water are recommended. In winter people usually wear thick coats, scarves and boots because mornings can be freezing. If somebody visited Hungary in autumn, I would advise them to bring both warm and lighter clothes because the weather can change suddenly.

Personally, I prefer spring because nature becomes colourful and the temperature is more comfortable. Last summer I had been feeling exhausted because of the extreme heat, especially in the city. Climate conditions are becoming more extreme nowadays, and many scientists believe that climate change is responsible for this problem. If governments introduced stricter environmental laws, pollution could probably be reduced in the future.

Animals and pets are also important parts of many people's lives. A lot of families keep dogs, cats or smaller pets at home because animals can provide emotional support and companionship. I think pets make homes friendlier and more cheerful. Personally, I really like animals, and I enjoy spending time with them whenever I have the opportunity.

Taking care of a pet requires responsibility because animals need food, medical care and attention every day. Before buying a pet, people should carefully consider both the advantages and disadvantages. For example, dogs are loyal and friendly, but they require regular walks and training. Smaller animals may be easier to care for, but they also need proper living conditions. Pets are often treated like family members nowadays, and special food and healthcare products are provided for them.

Zoos and botanical gardens are also interesting places because visitors can learn more about animals and plants from different parts of the world. Animals are usually protected and cared for by professionals in modern zoos. I think these places can help children develop respect for nature and wildlife.

Environmental protection has become one of the most important global issues. Many cities struggle with air pollution, traffic and waste management problems. In Budapest traffic jams and air pollution are common, especially during busy hours. Local environmental problems are often discussed at public forums or among neighbours and friends. In my opinion, people should pay more attention to recycling and reducing plastic waste.

I personally try to live in a more environmentally friendly way. For example, I usually bring reusable bags when shopping, and I try not to waste water or electricity. If more people adopted these habits, cities would probably become cleaner and healthier places to live in.

The place where people live also strongly affects their lifestyle. I think home should be comfortable, peaceful and practical at the same time. When guests visit somebody's home, they often notice the atmosphere, decoration and cleanliness first. Personally, I prefer simple and comfortable interiors because they create a relaxing environment.

Moving house or renovating a flat can be stressful, especially when several people live together. Household responsibilities are usually divided among family members or flatmates. If people do not communicate properly, conflicts may appear easily. A few months ago I had part of my home renovated, so I know that organizing repairs and daily life at the same time can be difficult.

Nowadays many people rent apartments, especially in larger cities. Before renting a flat, people usually ask about the price, location, public transport and utility costs. Good communication with landlords and neighbours is also important, particularly in foreign countries where cultural differences may exist.

City life and countryside life both have advantages and disadvantages. Cities usually provide more job opportunities, entertainment and public transport, while the countryside is quieter and less polluted. Personally, I think both lifestyles can be enjoyable depending on a person's needs and personality. If I had to choose, I would probably prefer living near a city because it offers more opportunities while nature is still accessible.

Overall, I believe people should take better care of both their homes and the environment. Small everyday habits, responsible animal care and environmental awareness can improve not only our own lives, but also the future of the planet.

WORK, CAREER AND FUTURE PLANS

Work plays a very important role in people's lives because most adults spend a large part of their time at work. A good workplace can provide financial stability, professional development and positive social relationships, while a stressful job can negatively affect both physical and mental health. Nowadays many people try to find a balance between career and private life because burnout and stress are becoming more common.

There are many different situations that employees have to handle at work every day. Office workers often organize meetings, order office supplies, answer emails or communicate with clients and colleagues. Sometimes additional tasks also appear, such as organizing a company event, arranging a farewell gift for a colleague or planning an end-of-year party. In my opinion, communication and organization skills are essential in these situations because misunderstandings can easily cause problems.

In my previous work experience I often had to manage administrative tasks and cooperate with different departments. For example, I sometimes helped organize documents and communicate with clients by email or phone. I have realized that flexibility is very important because unexpected situations can happen at any time. Last year I had been working on several tasks simultaneously, so I learned how to prioritize responsibilities more effectively.

Taking holidays or requesting days off is also an important part of working life. Employees usually have to discuss their plans with managers in advance in order to avoid scheduling problems. If colleagues cooperate well, workplace conflicts can often be prevented more easily.

Nowadays many people change jobs several times during their lives. Job searching can be stressful because applicants usually compete with many other candidates. Before applying for a position, people often prepare a professional CV and motivation letter. During job interviews employers usually ask about previous experience, strengths, weaknesses and future career plans.

I think job interviews are difficult for many people because nervousness can affect communication. However, preparation can help a lot. If I had an important interview, I would practice common questions and research the company beforehand. In my opinion, confidence and honesty are both very important during interviews.

When somebody starts a new job, they usually need information about responsibilities, working hours, salary, rules and expectations. This can be especially important in foreign student jobs where cultural differences and language barriers may also appear. New employees are often trained by experienced colleagues in order to help them adapt more quickly. I think supportive coworkers can make a huge difference during the first weeks at a new workplace.

Career plans and future goals are common topics during interviews and university admissions. Some people want to build long-term careers in one company, while others prefer flexibility and new challenges. Personally, I would like to have a stable job where I can continue developing my skills and gaining experience. At the same time, I think work-life balance is also essential because constant stress can lead to health problems.

Different jobs all have advantages and disadvantages. Office jobs are usually safer and physically easier, but they can become mentally exhausting because employees spend many hours sitting in front of computers. On the other hand, physical jobs may provide more movement, but they are often more tiring physically. Remote work has become increasingly popular because people can save time and travel costs, although some employees feel isolated when they work from home too much.

Nowadays many young people are looking for jobs that provide not only money but also personal satisfaction. I think this is understandable because people want to feel motivated and appreciated at work. If companies treated employees more fairly and provided better working conditions, workers would probably feel more loyal and productive.

Personally, I believe communication, reliability and adaptability are among the most important workplace skills. Technical knowledge can be learned over time, but positive attitude and responsibility are harder to teach. In the future I would like to continue improving my language and professional skills because these can create better career opportunities both in Hungary and abroad.

Overall, work is not only a way to earn money, but also an opportunity for personal growth and social connection. Choosing the right career path can be difficult, but with motivation, experience and continuous learning people can achieve their professional goals more successfully.

LANGUAGE LEARNING, SCHOOL AND EDUCATION

Education plays a very important role in people's lives because learning helps us develop knowledge, communication skills and future career opportunities. Nowadays language learning is especially important because foreign languages can help people study, work and travel more easily. English has become one of the most widely used international languages, so many people try to improve their language skills continuously.

I started learning English several years ago at school, but I have become much more serious about it recently because I would like to use English more confidently in both work and everyday situations. In my experience, language learning can sometimes be motivating and enjoyable, but it can also be stressful and difficult, especially when somebody has little free time.

During language courses students often have to solve different situations such as asking for homework, catching up after missing classes or requesting extra help from teachers. If somebody misses lessons, they usually need to borrow notes or ask classmates about the material. I think communication is very important in these situations because students can support each other a lot.

Personally, I sometimes struggle with listening exercises because native speakers often talk quickly or use different accents. Grammar can also be difficult, especially when several tenses have to be used together. Last year I had been studying many grammar topics at the same time, so sometimes I felt confused and overwhelmed. However, I have realized that regular practice and patience are essential in language learning.

When students apply for foreign language schools, they are often asked about their learning goals, difficulties and expectations. Some students want to improve speaking skills, while others focus more on grammar, writing or professional communication. If I attended a foreign language school, I would probably ask for more speaking practice because confidence is one of the most important parts of communication.

The English language is quite different from Hungarian in several ways. English grammar is usually simpler in some areas because there are fewer verb endings, but pronunciation and word order can be more difficult. Hungarian is also considered a unique language because it is very different from most European languages. I think foreign students often find Hungarian pronunciation difficult, while Hungarians usually struggle more with English tenses and pronunciation.

Language learners often ask for advice from teachers or classmates. In my opinion, the best way to improve a language is through regular practice and daily exposure. Watching films, listening to podcasts and speaking regularly can help students become more confident. If people practiced English every day, they would probably improve much faster.

Sometimes students also need to discuss problems with teachers or course leaders. For example, somebody may feel that the lessons are too fast or that they need additional exercises. Teachers are usually asked to explain grammar again or recommend extra materials in these situations. I think supportive teachers can make language learning much less stressful.

Education systems are also different in every country. In Hungary students usually attend primary school, secondary school and later university or vocational training. Subjects such as mathematics, history, literature, biology and foreign languages are taught in most schools. When exchange students visit Hungary, they are often interested in how the Hungarian school system works.

My favourite subjects were usually languages and subjects related to communication because I enjoyed learning practical skills. Good teachers can motivate students and create a positive classroom atmosphere. In my opinion, teachers should not only teach information but also encourage students to think independently and communicate confidently.

The Hungarian education system has both advantages and disadvantages. One advantage is that students receive broad general knowledge in many subjects. However, many students feel stressed because of exams, large amounts of homework and strict grading systems. If schools focused more on practical communication and less on memorization, students might feel more motivated.

Nowadays many students participate in international school programs or scholarship opportunities abroad. These programs allow students to improve their language skills and learn about other cultures. I think studying abroad can be a life-changing experience because students become more independent and open-minded.

Personally, I would like to continue improving my English because language knowledge can create better opportunities in both work and personal life. Although language learning sometimes feels difficult, I think persistence and regular practice always bring results in the long term.

FREE TIME, HOBBIES AND CULTURE

Free time is very important because people need relaxation after work, school and everyday responsibilities. Hobbies, cultural programs and sports activities can help people reduce stress, improve their mood and develop new skills. In my opinion, everybody should have at least one activity that helps them relax and enjoy life outside work or studying.

Nowadays people spend their free time in many different ways. Some people prefer active hobbies such as sports, hiking or travelling, while others enjoy quieter activities like reading, watching films or listening to music. Personally, I enjoy relaxing activities because they help me disconnect from stress and recharge mentally.

Friends often organize programs together such as going to the cinema, theatre, concerts or sports events. These activities usually require planning because people need to agree on time, tickets and transportation. Sometimes organizing group programs can be difficult because everybody has different schedules and interests. However, shared experiences can strengthen friendships and create good memories.

I personally enjoy watching films and series because they are entertaining and also useful for improving language skills. Recently I have been trying to watch more English-language content because it helps me improve my vocabulary and listening comprehension. Last month I watched a film that was both emotional and thought-provoking, and afterwards I discussed it with friends online. In my opinion, films can teach people a lot about different cultures and human relationships.

Reading is another valuable hobby because books can improve imagination and communication skills. Although many people spend more time online nowadays, I think reading is still important. Some books are written mainly for entertainment, while others help readers understand social or psychological problems more deeply. If people read more regularly, they would probably become more patient and open-minded.

Theatre and concerts are also popular cultural experiences. Live performances create a completely different atmosphere compared to watching something at home. Actors and musicians are often admired because of their talent and creativity. Personally, I enjoy concerts more than theatre performances because music can create strong emotions and energy. A few years ago I attended a live concert with friends, and the atmosphere was unforgettable.

Sports and physical activities are also common hobbies. Many people participate in running competitions, fitness programs or amateur sports events. Taking part in competitions can be exciting, but it can also be stressful because participants want to achieve good results. Before competitions, organizers usually explain the rules and possible dangers in order to avoid accidents and misunderstandings.

I think sports are useful not only for physical health but also for discipline and teamwork. If people exercised more regularly, they would probably feel healthier and more energetic. Personally, I prefer walking and lighter forms of exercise because they help me relax without too much pressure.

Nowadays hobbies are often shared on social media platforms where people post photos, reviews and personal opinions. Foreign friends sometimes ask about Hungarian cultural programs or local traditions. If foreign visitors came to Hungary, I would probably recommend visiting Budapest's theatres, concerts or festivals because the city has a rich cultural life.

Cultural experiences can also be criticized and discussed. People often have very different opinions about films, books or performances. Some people prefer action films and modern entertainment, while others enjoy classical literature or artistic films. In my opinion, cultural criticism can be interesting because it helps people understand different perspectives and tastes.

Personally, I think hobbies and cultural programs are essential parts of a balanced lifestyle. Free time activities help people relax, meet others and develop their personality. Although modern life is often busy and stressful, spending time on hobbies and culture can improve both mental health and overall quality of life.

Ez a tétel a szabadidőről, hobbiokról és kulturális élményekről szól. Bemutatja, hogyan töltik az emberek a szabadidejüket, milyen programokat szerveznek barátokkal, és milyen szerepe van a hobbinak a stressz csökkentésében és a kikapcsolódásban.

A szöveg kitér mozira, színházra, koncertekre és sportprogramokra, valamint ezek megszervezésére és közös élményként való megélésére. Szó van benne sportversenyekről, szabályokról és a mozgás egészségügyi előnyeiről is.

A kultúra témakörében a monológ beszél könyvekről, filmekről, színházi és zenei élményekről, illetve azok kritikájáról és megvitatásáról. A személyes példák – például filmnézés, koncertélmény és nyelvtanulás – természetesebbé és könnyebben előadhatóvá teszik a szöveget egy B2-es szóbeli nyelvvizsgán.

PERSONAL INFORMATION, PERSONALITY AND HUMAN CHARACTER

Every person is unique because everybody has different experiences, personality traits and communication styles. In everyday life people often have to introduce themselves, describe others or provide personal information in different situations. Good communication and clear self-expression are very important, especially when meeting foreign people or solving official problems.

Nowadays people frequently have to provide personal data during applications, job interviews, travel or official administration. For example, at an immigration office or during registration procedures people are usually asked about their name, nationality, address, qualifications and work experience. These situations can sometimes feel stressful, especially in a foreign country where communication may be more difficult.

When meeting new people, introductions are also important because first impressions can strongly influence relationships. People often talk about their hobbies, studies, work or family during conversations. Personally, I think friendly and polite communication is essential because it helps create a positive atmosphere. If somebody is open-minded and respectful, communication usually becomes much easier.

I have met several foreign people through work and language learning situations. In these conversations I usually try to speak clearly and confidently, even if I sometimes make mistakes. Last year I had been practicing English regularly because I wanted to improve my speaking skills and become more confident in international situations. I think language learning also helps people become more understanding toward different cultures.

Describing people is another important communication skill. Sometimes people describe family members to exchange students or introduce colleagues to new coworkers. Personality descriptions often include both positive and negative characteristics. For example, somebody may be reliable, patient and hardworking, while another person may be impatient, selfish or disorganized.

In my opinion, reliability and honesty are among the most important human qualities because trust is essential in both personal and professional relationships. Personally, I appreciate calm and supportive people because they can create a better atmosphere even in stressful situations. My family members all have different personalities, but we usually support each other during difficult times.

At workplaces it is also important to understand different personalities because teamwork depends heavily on communication. Some colleagues are more outgoing and sociable, while others are quieter and more independent. If people respected each other more and communicated honestly, many conflicts could probably be avoided.

Unfortunately, people sometimes need to describe somebody in difficult or negative situations as well. For example, witnesses may have to give information to the police after crimes or accidents. In these situations people are usually asked about physical appearance, clothing, behaviour and other important details. Clear communication is extremely important because misunderstandings could cause serious problems during investigations.

A few years ago I witnessed a smaller conflict in a public place, and I realized how difficult it can be to remember details accurately under stress. Witnesses are often asked to stay calm and describe events as precisely as possible. In my opinion, stressful situations show a person's true personality because some people remain calm while others panic easily.

Nowadays social media also influences how people present themselves. Many people try to show only the positive side of their lives online, although reality is usually more complicated. I think personality is much more complex than what people share on the internet. Real communication and personal experiences are far more important than online appearances.

Overall, I believe personality and communication skills strongly influence relationships, work and everyday life. Positive qualities such as honesty, empathy and responsibility can help people build stronger connections and solve problems more effectively. Although nobody is perfect, self-awareness and good communication can improve both personal and professional relationships.

Ez a tétel a személyes adatok, a személyiség és az emberi tulajdonságok témáját dolgozza fel. Bemutatja, hogyan kell bemutatkozni külföldieknek, személyes adatokat megadni hivatalos helyzetekben vagy jelentkezéseknél, illetve hogyan lehet más embereket jellemezni.

A szöveg kitér a pozitív és negatív emberi tulajdonságokra, a családtagok és kollégák bemutatására, valamint arra, hogyan befolyásolják a személyiségek a munkahelyi és emberi kapcsolatokat. A monológ személyes tapasztalatokat is tartalmaz nyelvtanulásról és nemzetközi kommunikációról.

A tétel foglalkozik problémás helyzetekkel is, például tanúvallomással vagy rendőrségi leírással, ahol fontos a pontos emberjellemezés és a nyugodt kommunikáció. A személyes példák és természetes vélemények miatt a szöveg jól használható B2-es szóbeli nyelvvizsgán.

ECONOMY, BUSINESS LIFE, SERVICES AND SHOPPING

Nowadays services and shopping play an essential role in everyday life because people constantly use banks, shops, online platforms and different service providers. Modern technology has made administration and purchasing faster and more convenient, although these situations can still become stressful, especially in foreign countries where language barriers may appear.

When people travel or live abroad, they often have to manage official tasks such as opening a bank account, sending parcels at the post office or arranging travel documents at a travel agency. In these situations customers are usually asked to fill in forms and provide personal information. I think these administrative processes can be difficult if somebody is not confident in the local language.

Personally, I have experienced situations where official administration required patience and careful communication. Sometimes documents have to be completed accurately because even small mistakes may cause delays or misunderstandings. Last year I had been dealing with several administrative tasks at the same time, so I realized how important organization and attention to detail are.

Banking is also an important part of everyday life. People use banks for money transfers, savings accounts, loans and online payments. Nowadays online banking has become extremely popular because transactions can be completed quickly from home. However, many people still prefer personal customer service, especially when financial problems or more complicated situations have to be discussed.

If I lived abroad for a longer period, I would probably choose a bank with English-speaking customer service because communication is essential in financial matters. Personal finances should always be managed carefully because irresponsible spending can easily cause problems in the future.

Unfortunately, customer complaints are also common in services and shopping. People sometimes receive damaged products, incorrect bills or poor-quality services. In these situations customers usually contact customer service by phone, email or in person. Complaints are often handled more effectively if people remain calm and polite. If employees communicated more professionally with customers, many conflicts could probably be solved more quickly.

Shopping habits have changed significantly during recent years. Nowadays people can buy almost everything online, from clothes and electronics to food and household products. Online shopping is convenient because customers can compare prices and order products without leaving home. Personally, I use online shopping occasionally because it saves time, although I still prefer seeing products in person before buying expensive items.

Advertisements also strongly influence consumer behaviour. Companies often use social media, television and online advertisements in order to attract customers. Sometimes people buy unnecessary products simply because advertisements are convincing or emotionally appealing. In my opinion, consumers should think carefully before making purchases and avoid impulsive shopping.

Foreign visitors are often interested in Hungarian shopping habits and shop types. In Hungary there are supermarkets, shopping centres, small local shops and traditional markets. Local markets are especially popular because customers can buy fresh vegetables, fruit and homemade products directly from producers. I think traditional markets create a friendlier atmosphere than large shopping malls.

When shopping abroad, communication skills become especially important. Customers may need to ask for information, request different sizes or make complaints about products. A few years ago I bought an item online that arrived damaged, so I had to contact customer service and request a replacement. Although the situation was frustrating, the problem was solved successfully after several emails.

Different types of services all have advantages and disadvantages. Online services are usually faster and more convenient, but personal communication is often more effective in complicated situations. If technology continues developing rapidly, more administrative tasks will probably become fully digital in the future.

Overall, I believe people should become more conscious consumers and manage their finances responsibly. Good communication, careful planning and financial awareness can help people avoid unnecessary problems in both shopping and everyday administration.

A szöveg foglalkozik a panasztétellel, ügyfélszolgálati kommunikációval és problémakezeléssel is. Kitér az online vásárlás előnyeire és hátrányaira, valamint arra, hogyan hatnak a reklámok a vásárlási szokásokra.

A monológ összehasonlítja a magyar üzlettípusokat és vásárlási lehetőségeket, például a helyi piacokat és bevásárlóközpontokat. Személyes tapasztalatokat is tartalmaz online rendelésről és ügyintézésről, így természetesebben hangzik egy B2-es szóbeli nyelvvizsgán.

SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY AND SOCIAL MEDIA

Science and technology have changed human life dramatically during the last decades. Modern inventions and digital communication make everyday life faster, easier and more comfortable, although they also create new challenges and risks. Nowadays people use technological devices almost constantly both at work and in their private lives.

Scientific discoveries have improved healthcare, transportation, communication and education. For example, modern medicine can treat illnesses that were considered dangerous in the past, while the internet allows people to access information within seconds. In my opinion, scientific progress has greatly improved people's quality of life.

However, scientific and technological developments also have disadvantages. Some people worry that technology is making society more dependent and less personal. Others are concerned about environmental pollution caused by factories and electronic waste. If governments invested more money in environmentally friendly technologies, some of these problems could probably be reduced.

Artificial intelligence and automation are also becoming increasingly important. Many jobs are already partly automated, and some people are afraid that machines may replace human workers in the future. Personally, I think technology should support people instead of completely replacing them. Human communication, creativity and emotional intelligence are still extremely important in many professions.

Technology is an essential part of everyday communication. Smartphones, laptops and tablets are used for work, studying and entertainment. People often explain how devices work to friends, relatives or coworkers, especially when somebody is less experienced with technology. For example, older generations sometimes ask younger family members for help with phones or computers.

Personally, I use technology every day for communication, studying and entertainment. I often use my phone for messaging, listening to music or checking emails. Last year I had been spending too much time online, so I realized that balance is important in digital life as well.

Sometimes people also borrow or lend technical devices to each other. For example, somebody may ask to borrow a charger, laptop or headphones temporarily. In my opinion, trust and responsibility are very important in these situations because technical devices can be expensive and fragile.

Computers and online platforms have also transformed education and workplaces. During recent years online meetings and remote work have become much more common. If the internet stopped working for even one day, many companies and schools would probably experience serious difficulties.

Social media platforms are among the most popular online services nowadays. People use them to communicate, share photos, follow news and keep in touch with friends or relatives. Social media makes international communication easier because people can stay connected even if they live in different countries.

Personally, I think social media has both positive and negative sides. One advantage is that people can quickly share information and maintain relationships. However, social media can also become addictive, and false information spreads very easily online. Some users compare themselves constantly to others, which may negatively affect mental health and self-confidence.

Different generations also use technology differently. Younger people are usually more comfortable with digital communication, while older generations sometimes prefer face-to-face conversations or phone calls. In my opinion, both online and personal communication are important because technology should support relationships instead of replacing them completely.

Nowadays people spend a lot of time using applications, streaming platforms and online services. Technology has made life more efficient, but it has also reduced the amount of direct human interaction in some situations. If people used technology more consciously, they would probably have healthier and more balanced lifestyles.

Overall, I believe science and technology are extremely valuable when they are used responsibly. Scientific progress and digital communication can improve education, healthcare and everyday life, but people should also pay attention to privacy, mental health and real human relationships.

Ez a tétel a tudományról, technológiáról és a közösségi média használatáról szól. Bemutatja a tudományos fejlődés előnyeit és hátrányait, például az orvostudomány, az internet és a mesterséges intelligencia fejlődését, valamint az ezekkel kapcsolatos társadalmi problémákat.

A szöveg foglalkozik technikai eszközök használatával, kölcsönadásával és a digitális kommunikáció szerepével a mindennapi életben. Kitér arra is, hogyan használják az emberek a telefonokat, számítógépeket és online platformokat munkára, tanulásra és kapcsolattartásra.

A monológ részletesen beszél a közösségi média előnyeiről és veszélyeiről, például az online függőségről, a hamis információkról és a mentális egészségre gyakorolt hatásokról. A személyes tapasztalatok miatt a szöveg természetes és könnyen előadható egy B2-es szóbeli nyelvvizsgán.

TRAVEL, TRANSPORT AND HOLIDAYS

Travelling is one of the most enjoyable and useful experiences because it allows people to discover new places, cultures and traditions. Nowadays travelling has become much easier thanks to modern transportation and online booking systems. In my opinion, travelling is not only relaxing, but it also helps people become more open-minded and independent.

Transportation plays an important role in everyday life and tourism as well. When people travel abroad, they often have to ask for directions or explain routes to others. Clear communication is especially important in foreign countries because misunderstandings can easily cause stress or delays.

Personally, I think giving directions can sometimes be challenging in English because people have to explain locations clearly and logically. Typical expressions such as “turn left”, “go straight ahead” or “take the second street on the right” are very useful in these situations. If somebody looked lost in my city, I would definitely try to help them politely.

Public transport is widely used in many countries because it is usually cheaper and more environmentally friendly than travelling by car. Buses, trains, trams and underground systems are common in larger cities. In Budapest public transport is relatively well organized, and tourists can usually reach most important places easily. However, during rush hour vehicles are often crowded and delays sometimes happen.

Different types of transport all have advantages and disadvantages. Travelling by train is usually comfortable and relaxing, while buses are often cheaper but slower. Air travel is fast and convenient for long distances, although it can be expensive and stressful because of security checks and delays. Personally, I prefer travelling by train because I enjoy the calmer atmosphere and the scenery during the journey.

When people visit foreign countries, they often become interested in local traditions and customs. Every country has unique habits related to food, greetings, celebrations or communication styles. Learning about these traditions can help tourists avoid misunderstandings and show respect toward local people.

I think cultural experiences are one of the best parts of travelling. If foreign tourists visited Hungary, I would recommend trying traditional Hungarian food, visiting historical buildings and experiencing local festivals. Budapest is especially popular because it offers beautiful architecture, thermal baths and a lively cultural atmosphere.

Sometimes tourists also need help while travelling. Local people may give directions, recommend restaurants or explain transportation systems. Personally, I enjoy helping foreign visitors because communication with people from different countries can be very interesting and educational.

Planning holidays usually requires a lot of organization. Nowadays people often book accommodation, transport and programs online. Before travelling, customers usually compare prices, check reviews and look for the best offers. Online booking systems are convenient, but technical problems or misunderstandings may occasionally appear.

A few years ago I had to change a hotel reservation because of unexpected circumstances. I contacted customer service by email and explained the situation politely. Fortunately, the problem was solved successfully, although it required several messages. In my opinion, patience and clear communication are extremely important when dealing with travel-related problems.

Holiday planning also includes choosing accommodation and services. Some people prefer luxury hotels, while others choose apartments or cheaper hostels. Personally, I prefer comfortable but practical accommodation because I usually spend more time exploring the city than staying in the hotel.

Travelling can sometimes be stressful because flights may be delayed, luggage can be lost or reservations may be cancelled unexpectedly. If travel companies communicated more effectively with customers, many stressful situations could probably be handled more easily.

Overall, I believe travelling is one of the best ways to learn about the world and develop communication skills. Transportation, cultural experiences and meeting new people can all make journeys memorable and valuable. Although travelling sometimes involves unexpected difficulties, the positive experiences usually make it worthwhile.
